

The Daily Gazetteer.

NUMB. 1744

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9. 1741

SHOULD now, according to my Promise, proceed to offer to the View of the Publick, the Proofs which might be produced to demonstrate the Wisdom of the present Administration, from the present State of Affairs abroad; but I conceive I may be allowed to defer this, in order

Notice of a malicious and scandalous Infinnation thrown out by one of the Incendiaries, that what appeared in the former, is to be considered only as an Opinion by an Author in the Gazetteer: Whence this man, no doubt, would have it inferred, that it was but a little Notice, and no Credit.

World would have good Reason to entertain a Opinion of me, if I could be capable of being with the Writer who said this: But that is impossible: His own Party know that he will say any thing, and the sole Reason therefore that inclines me to give Notice of what he says, is, that the Faction he is too apt to say the same Thing; that is, are to rid themselves of Facts fairly proved, and that they cannot answer, by flinging at the Paper which they are published; and therefore it is but fit to consider once, what has and what may always be of Persons concerned in Political Disputes, to be as cautiously receiv'd as the Oaths of Persons in the Event of a Suit. This is an equitable and those in Power would be extremely happy if the Publick would apply it to the Craftsman, Common Sense, &c. For if their Assertions went for nothing, they would be in no Pain about what they prove. For I never offered in the Gazetteer, nor ever by Fact, without supporting it by Evidence, or without unattended by Reasons. I did this when I thought that we have all the Testimonies of the Nation well govern'd at Home, that we can reason with our own Eyes. I know these People too well, that any Authority should have Weight with them who libel their Sovereign, and revile the Administration, nay, deride and censure the Legislature every day. I should be weak indeed, if to such I laid any Strefs to my Affirmation, to whom from the Throne are but Words of Course, and the Laws of the Land so many Subjects for In-ould gladly know whether Government be not to the People as well as to the Possessors of it, and whether if some of the former attack the Government, it is either Penal or Infamous to defend them? The meanest Man in England acquire Reputation by saying such as are in the Service of the Publick, and no Man be at Liberty to enquire whether he is from Private Prejudice, or Publick Spirit; he is angry with Corruption, or affects to seem so he is corrupted? At this Rate there would be no Right and Wrong, and the noblest Civil Liberty of employing one's Talents for the good of one's Country, would be extirpated from those who boast of being a Free People. Free from Sense, Moderation, and Gratitude; from any Concern whether their Governors are or belied; free from all Respect to Justice, Humanity, or Political Prudence? If this be the Freedom our pretended Patriots aim at, avert it, otherwise we must soon be Slaves.

Justice is due even to Ministers, if it be unfair to the Country where we cannot hang a Highwayman without Testimony, to condemn an Administration without Evidence, it follows that some Rule of Judgment must be set up; and yet this is the Thing our Ministers and their Scribes would avoid. They labour to do those whom they pretend to convince; and to distinguish between Charges and Proof, and Scandal to Scandal, Clamour to Clamour, and which they themselves allow to be of the utmost Importance, afford us nothing but Golden Rumps, Travels, or, to express it in plain English, and Non-sense.

A Consciousness of this, when I asserted a contradiction, I produced such Proofs as the Nature of the Case required. I suppose the Publick, or even the Patriots, do not expect geometrical Demonstrations; if they are not only not to be had, but if they would not be to the Purpose. Causes produce Effects, and therefore the alledging certain Effects, is the properest Proof that there is such a Cause as we assign. But to talk of Causes which are known to produce the worst Effects, as Tyranny and Male-Administration must, and when called on to shew any such Effects so stand silent, prevaricate, or aver Fallshoods, is abusing the Tribunal to which Men appeal. In this Case it is spitting in the Face of the People, and if they will long bear this, then assuredly they are not so free as they think themselves.

The Advocates for the Faction had over and over affirmed we were ill governed at home: When called upon to prove this, they told us it was notorious. In the Craftsman of January 10, 1740-1, Mr. Danvers says, "In this political Trial, every body must himself be Judge, Jury, and Evidence." In Common Sense of Jan. 3, 1740-1, the Author says on the same Subject, "In things of publick Notoriety, the World must be the Jury, and decide who it is that gives false Evidence." If this means any thing, it should mean that the People are thoroughly satisfy'd of the Truth of what they say, so that to prove one Fact they affirm another, and ask them to prove this, and they will laugh in your Face. Yet, on a Supposition that Lovers of Truth would be glad to come at it, I was content to go the Road they prescribed, and accordingly I undertook to examine what Reason there was to believe the People were of this Mind.

The Craftsman himself had before told us, that when he spoke of the People, he did not mean, Shoe-boys, Link-men, Oflers, Tinkers, Porters and Cobblers, which was indeed a Secret, for till then I thought them the only People he meant, but that he would be understood of the Landed and Monied Interest. To them therefore I went, and he having in the same Paper told me, that the only Way in the World to know People's Sentiments was to consider their Actions, I resolv'd to inspect these with the utmost Exactness. In the first place I look'd for Grievances, and could find none. I looked on Parliamentary Elections, and found they spoke the very Reverse of what these Writers asserted. I was satisfied then they were mistaken in the Landed Men, upon which I turned me to the Monied Interest. I found upon this Inquiry, that Publick Credit was higher than Private, which appeared by the Nation's borrowing at less than legal Interest; and I found, that this was peculiar to the present Administration; which led me to believe, that Men were not dissatisfied with those in whom they put such a Trust. As to the Landed Men, the Gross of the Election in Great Britain, I know the Answer is ready, They are corrupted. As to the Monied Men, They to be sure are bewitched. To such Arguments there is no replying. But to Folks who talk soberly, I would say, that trusting Power and Wealth in Mens Hands, is no direct Proof of having a bad Opinion of them. In this Case I am content that every Man should be Judge and Jury, and therefore to the Verdict of every Man's Conscience I leave it.

Conclusion of the Queen of Hungary's Letter to her Ministers at Ratisbon, about the King of Prussia's Invasion of SILESIA.

WE could prove what we say by a great many Letters under his Prussian Majesty's own Hand; and no longer ago than the 14th of December his Minister de Borch deliver'd one of the 6th of that Month, wherein that Prince mightily boasted the Sincerity and Purity of his Views for the Advantage of our Spouse: But alas! we were soon given to understand, that under a Pretence that we were on the Brink of being swallowed up by others, the Cession of the Duchy of Silesia was demanded of us, with a Menace to take it by Force in Case of Refusal, and then not to stop there, but to join such as 'twas pretended had form'd a Design to share our Dominions among them, and who had previously offer'd the King of Prussia much more advantageous Terms.

At the Time that this Language was used to Us and our Ministers, Declarations were made so inconsistent with, and so contradictory to it, that it was insinuated to some of the Powers, that we were enter'd into Engagements which tended to their Ruin. To others it was suggested that we were in concert with the King of Prussia, with regard to the Enterprize upon Silesia; and to prove it they made no Scruple to appeal to the King of Prussia's sending his Grand Marshal to our Court: In a word, there is nothing but what has been put in Practice to lull us asleep, and to confound and amuse others; while double Diligence was us'd to commence Hostilities against us. The Letter above-mention'd of the 6th of December, was not put into our Hands till Troops were actually enter'd into the Villages of the Silesian Frontier, till Provisions were call'd in from the Countries under our Dominion, and till our Subjects were sent for to Crossen, to give a Declaration upon Oath as to the Delivery of the Provisions for the Army, which was to enter into Silesia, and which accordingly did enter it immediately after, in Violation of the Solemn Assurances that had been given, as well as in Breach of all Laws Divine and Human.

No amicable Complaint was made, as the Laws establish'd between good Neighbours require, of any Grievance imposed by Us, or our Officers and Subjects. When the Rumour of this inconceivable Design was blaz'd abroad, the Prussian Ministers residing at Foreign Courts affect'd to know nothing of it, but expressly deny'd it: And tho' at last they seem'd inclinable to make mention of some pretended Rights, yet it was done in a very trivial and cursory Manner; tho' after all is said and done, they could not produce any Pretensions which had not been abolish'd by solemn Contracts.

This being the State of Affairs, and the Writing which the King of Prussia has published to colour his Proceeding being more than sufficient to set it in a full Light, we think it needless to expose the great and imminent Danger with which the whole Empire is threaten'd, more at large. Every one of its Members without Distinction of Religion must expect the same Treatment as we; and in this they cannot be mistaken, unless they deliberately renounce Evidence itself. For what way can they think to be secure from a sudden Invasion, when they see as it were all the Constitutions of the Empire trampled under foot, the most sacred Engagements despised, and the natural Bands of Society torn in pieces and destroyed?

If we are treated after a Manner so unheard of only because the Opportunity seems favourable to invade another's Estate and seize it, what must they expect to whom Heaven has not granted the same Power! The present is a common Cause. 'Tis not our Safety and that of our Archiducal Family alone that are at stake, but the Salus Publica, and the Security of every Individual. All other Considerations must be set aside when a Violation is offered to those sacred Bands of Society, the Preservation of which concerns all Nations in general. By consequence, the greater and the more imminent is the Danger, the more Earnestness and Zeal ought to be shewn for uniting and confederating against a Proceeding of this Nature.

We are ready to face the Danger with Resolution, and make no scruple to declare that for all the vast Expence that we shall be liable to more than any other Power for the Safety of the Publick, we expect no other Reward than the entire Indemnification of our Subjects and the Foreigners that have lent considerable Sums upon the Security of the States of Silesia, and the procuring both for Us and Them sufficient Securities against any other Enterprizes of this Nature. Moreover, as this is an Affair which affects all the Powers that are interested in the Preservation of the Law of Nature and Nations, we address ourselves with the same Views to most of the Christian Courts, and particularly to those whose Dominions as well as ours border upon those of the King of Prussia, or which are particularly obliged to support us. But we thought that first and foremost we ought not to defer one Moment to give Notice to the Ambassadors, Ministers and Counsellors of the Electors, Princes and States of the Empire assembled at Ratisbon, of an Event so unexpected and at the same time so incredible that one would almost question the Reality of what we have seen with our own Eyes, and at the same time to request them to make a Report of it without Delay to their Masters, and to desire their Orders for instantly averting this great and common Danger, considering that if the Zeal of true Patriots ever ought to be routed for hindering the Constitution of the Empire from being subverted, now is the time. Of this therefore we hope to receive real proofs, and we engage on our part to give our dear Country in general, and every one in particular, Proofs of our sincere Acknowledgment on this Occasion. &c.
